Exploring the role of health workers in abortion self-care

With the increasing number of abortions being self-managed using medical abortion pills, either through preference or lack of other options, IPPF recognises abortion self-care as the right of women and girls to lead their abortion journey, with or without support from health workers.

If a woman does choose to involve a health worker in her abortion self-care journey, what role should they play? How can healthcare staff be supported to transition from a position of gatekeeper and provider of abortion services to a role of facilitator and supportive partner in abortion self-care?

IPPF's diverse network of locally owned Member Associations (MAs) provide abortion care across the globe in a wide range of settings. IPPF MAs are using their significant experience of providing comprehensive abortion care to adapt existing service delivery models, offering easier more effective links to care as a key part of a woman's support network in her abortion self-care. In doing so, they are transforming abortion care from an approach which is often medicalized and provider-led, into one in which health systems may play a supportive role and health professionals empower individuals to play a leading role in their care.

In this session, IPPF MAs from Colombia and Ghana will share lessons learned, good practice and challenges from their experience of developing models of support for abortion self-care. In addition, we will hear from IPPF partner Women First Digital on their experience of using digital health to support women in abortion self-care, including through referrals for in-person care when needed.

My Body My Life

Real stories of abortion, is a multimedia travelling exhibition, first shown at the 2017 Edinburgh Fringe Festival. While one in three people in the UK will have an abortion at some point in their lives, research has shown that abortion is still highly stigmatised and shrouded in secrecy. The silence surrounding abortion can lead to stigma, generate shame, isolation and self-blame. To address this, we developed <http://mybody-my-life.org/> as a travelling story-telling exhibition that allows people to share their personal stories about abortion. Designed by The Liminal Space, the exhibition is research-based, and co-produced by academics, abortion providers, sexual health professionals and activists. It has already taken positive steps to challenge abortion stigma, making a space where abortion is normalised and discussed openly. The exhibition shares women's stories in their own words — their experiences, their emotions and their decisions. This exhibition also enables anyone affected by abortion to contribute their story (anonymously) to the exhibition stands, and to the associated website.
